Int'l Disabled and Nat'l Disabled Day today

Social inclusion of disabled mandatory for sustainable development

JUWEL RANA

'Disability need not be an obstacle to success. I have had motor neurone disease for practically all my adult life. But I realize that I am very lucky, in many ways. My success in theoretical physics has ensured that I am supported to live a worthwhile life. It is very clear that the majority of people with disabilities in the world have an extremely difficult time with everyday survival, let alone productive employment and personal fulfillment', said Prof Stephen W Hawking.

- Disability: physical, mental and psychological impairments
- 1 billion people experience disability globally
- Facing discrimination in employment or transportation
- 9.93 % people disabled in Bangladesh (male: 11.10, female: 8.77) 13.91-19.37% disabilities rate in Rangpur division
- Types in Bangladesh: blindness, night blindness, deaf, cerebral palsy,
- kustha, achondroplasia, dhabal, goitre Advanced policies needed to mainstream disabled people
- Quota system not sufficient in their true inclusion
- Cusses: accident, illness, aging, by born or hereditary etc
- Cosmetic surgery, genetic screening, limb lengthening, cochlear implants, conductive education needed
- Initiating sign language in schools, barrier removal, awareness raising, legislative reformations

Disability refers to the physical, mental and psychological impairments of persons that exclude them from participating in the mainstream social activities. According to the WHO, 'Disability is the umbrella term for impairments, activity limitations and participation restrictions, referring to the negative aspects of the interaction between an individual (with a health condition) and that individual's contextual factors (environmental and personal factors)'. Disability includes difficulties encountered in body function like paralysis; difficulties in executing activities e.g. walking; and problems with involvement in any area of life such as facing discrimination in employment or transportation. Disability is an important social agenda of informational society ensuring sustainable development with the revolutionary usages of technology in our daily life. We can understand this phenomena depicting disability condition of Bangladesh including types, causes and its socio-cultural construction.

Today (3rd December 2014) is the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. In 1976, the United Nations General Assembly proclaimed 1981 as the International Year of Disabled Persons and 1983-1992 the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons for implementation of plans at the national, regional and international levels, with an emphasis on equalization of opportunities, rehabilitation and prevention of disabilities. The theme of International Day of Persons with Disabilities 2014 is 'Sustainable Development: The Promise of Technology' focusing the role of technology in disaster risk reduction and emergency responses; creating enabling working environments and disabilityinclusive sustainable development goals. > (Contd. on page-11)

Dhaka seeks 100MW addl electricity from Tripura

DHAKA: Dhaka has urged New Delhi to give additional 100 MW of electricity to Bangladesh from Palatana Power Plant in northeastern Indian state of Tripura, reports UNB.

"We've sought 100 MW power in addition to the already promised 100 MW of electricity from the Palatana plant," said State Minister for Power and Energy Nasrul Hamid, talking to reporters on the sideline of a workshop on 'Power System Master Plan' at Bidyut Bhaban in the city on Tuesday.

He informed that New Delhi has agreed to provide the earlier promised 100 MW of electricity from Palatana plant and it will take nine (9) months' time to reach Bangladesh. At present, Bangladesh has been importing 500 MW of electricity from India through its western border. India had promised to give another 100 MW power from its 720 MW Palatana power plant to reciprocate the good gesture shown by Dhaka in allowing its port and road communication facilities to be used by the Indian side to transport their massive equipments for the plant. Recently, Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi inaugurated the second unit of the gas-fired Palatana power plant where Bangladesh state minister for power was present as a guest.

Referring to his discussion with the Indian high ups including the Indian prime minister, Nasrul Hamid said he believes that the neighbouring country will consider Dhaka's request for the additional 100 MW of power.

He also said that Bangladesh is waiting for the Bhutanese Prime Minister's Dhaka visit next week to discuss transborder electricity import from the small Himalayan country.

CHT Commission concerned over 'partial implementation of peace accord'

It calls for roadmap for its full implementation

DHAKA: The International Chittagong Hill Tracts Commission has voiced concern over the government's lack of political will leading to the failure of full implementation of the CHT Accord even after 17 years of its signing, reports UNB

It urged the government to urgently adopt and enforce a roadmap with clear milestones for implementation of the peace treaty, ensuring the full participation

In a statement on Tuesday, the CHT Commission said Awami League signed the accord with Parbatya Chattagram Jana Sanghati Samiti (PCJSS) on December 2, 1997 and the present Awami League government has repeatedly pledged to implement it. It says peace and stability in the CHT continued to deteriorate throughout the two terms of the Awami League government and there has been no effort to strengthen local institutions and end land conflicts.

On November 23, 2014, parliament passed the three Hill District Councils amendment acts despite strong opposition from the indigenous community. The Ministry of CHT Affairs tabled the Rangamati Hill District Council (Amendment) Bill 2014, the Khagrachari Hill District Council (Amendment) Bill 2014 and the Bandarban Hill District Council (Amendment) Bill 2014 on July 1.

As a result, the number of interim members of the hill district councils will rise to 11 from the existing five, including three non-indigenous members, the statement says adding that the government has violated the accord by increasing the number of members without an election. The accord also stipulates the preparation of a voter list comprising only the permanent residents of the three hill districts. The CHT Commission also asked the government to start work on resolving land disputes immediately aiming to authenticate the permanent residents of the CHT and draw up a voter list and hold elections to the Hill District Councils.

The government has failed to dismantle all temporary camps as stipulated in the 1997 CHT Accord and the presence of security forces appears to be increasing. In recent years, the securitisation has also proliferated through other security forces like the Border Guards Bangladesh (BGB), according to the statement.

Captain Babul, an outstanding war hero

FARIDPUR: The day was December 17 in 1971, the second day of the Independent Bangladesh, which blood after the humiliating surrender Suhrawardy Uddyan on penultimate day, reports BSS.

A nation thus secured its place on the world map with a new flag under the leadership of Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, a true spokesman for the oppressed millions and a great ambassador of democracy, who was still in a Pakistani jail on that day.

Narrating the experience of December 17, Noor Mohammad alias captain Babul, now in his eighties, said amidst cheers and applause of the crowds chanting slogans to celebrate their cherished victory after the ninemonth bloody war, a dramatic scene took place at a big house 'Moez Monjil' in Faridpur town.

The Indian army personnel were staying in that house. The Brigade commander of the defeated army, who had retreated after the fall of Jessore cantonment, finally surrendered to the Indian army commander Brigadier Rajendra Nath. One Pakistani Brigadier Abrar according to military customs surrendered his unloaded revolver along with the rank badge to the Indian army commander, who was accompanying a tall and lanky unshaved Bangalee Freedom Fighter, uniformed in combat dress named Nur

Mohammad alias captain Babul.

"I shouted furiously at the surrendering Pakistani officer saying, emerged with glory from a pool of fresh Brigadier, earlier you were shying to surrender to the Muktibahini. Why the Indian Army? If you have any prestige, then you should have committed suicide before surrender. Brigadier Rajendra Nath cooled down Babul and asked him not to be excited," Babul told BSS.

In an exclusive interview at his residence here, Babul, who joined the Pakistan Navy as a Leading Seaman in 1953, said he was thinking about separation from the western wing of Pakistan from 1964 after being frustrated and humiliated by the discriminatory policy of the Pakistan government.

"I had to face humiliations, insult and deprivations from the non-Bengali colleagues as I was a Bangalee. At this stage I came in contact with the then Awami League leader Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, who was fighting for the autonomy of erstwhile East Pakistan through his historic 6-point demand for the injustices in all sectors by the Pakistani rulers," he said.

Babul also said that he was in close contact with Sheikh Mujibur Rahman along with other Bangalee Naval officials that led him to be involved with much talked Agartala Conspiracy Case.

Violation of anti-tobacco law rampant in Joypurhat

Mashrekul Islam, Joypurhat Correspondent:

Tobacco is considered to be the greatest single health hazard for mankind. It is the only legal consumer product that kills onethird to one-half of those who use it as intended by its manufacturers, with its victims dying 15 years prematurely on an average.

Violation of anti-tobacco law is rampant in Joypurhat in absence of effective government steps to enforce the law prohibiting smoking in public places and selling of cigarettes and other tobacco products to people below 18 years of age.

In a bid to protect non-smokers from the harms of passive smoking, the government in May 2013 introduced Smoking and Tobacco Products Usage (Control) Act 2013 banning smoking in public places. The law also made it mandatory for cigarette producers to put statutory warning on the packets to discourage smoking. As per the law, anyone flouting the provisions of the law would be fined Tk 300. However, smoking in public places such as bus stands, hospitals, railway stations, schools, markets is commonplace. Sufferers, particularly the non-smokers said that police or any other law enforcement agencies were indifferent to violation of the law.

Display of attractive leaflets of cigarettes at sales points and tea stalls is one of the latest tactics of tobacco companies. Small- size colorful leaflets of leading cigarette companies were seen at tea stalls, point of sales and others shops are seen on every roads of Joypurhat. As per the amended tobacco control law, any person found carrying out promotional campaign on tobacco and tobacco products will face three months jail term or a fine (maximum) of Taka lakh or both punishments. In case of repeating the violation of the law, punishment will be doubled.

Experts believe that National Tobacco Control Cell had failed to control use of tobacco due lack of coordination between law enforcement agencies and the cell.

Handloom sector needs supports

It is regrettable that a sector which has a major role in the lives of mass people in the country - the handloom sector - is a relatively neglected one. The figures suggest that the total demand for fabrics in the country is about 1676 million metres. Out of this demand, 63 per cent or 800 million metres are produced by the local handloom operators who make clothes used by common people in their every day life such as saris, lungis, gamchas, etc. Handloom industry is found to be next only to agriculture in creating employment in the rural areas. More than 10 million people are linked directly or indirectly with it.

This sector can be quickly uplifted in every sense to create jobs at the grassroots level where the same are badly needed. Besides, the handloom products can be a source of substantial foreign currency earnings. There is considerable scope for greater utilisation of the fabrics produced by the handloom sector in the export oriented ready-made garments (RMG) industries. Therefore, fabrics from the handlooms are helping vital valueaddition in the RMG industries and this process can accelerate with more assistance channeled to the handloom operators. Fabrics known as Grameen Check, Dhaka Check and Aarong Check are already being produced by the handloom sector and used in the RMG industries. There used to be import dependence for such fabrics in the past. Skull caps, lungis, gamchas, bedsheets, bedcovers, etc., produced by the handloom sector are being exported directly to some Middle Eastern and South East Asian countries. The handloom sector has a great deal of potential for further value addition in the RMG sector, for further meeting local needs of fabrics and expanding sales of its products directly in foreign countries. But at the moment, this is a relatively less assisted sector and a media report sometime ago stated that 37.6 per cent of the handlooms are not operational.

This stagnation in the handlooms sector calls for more focused attention to its problems by the government in view of its all round prospects. Apart from its possibilities in greater foreign currency earnings, it can be a source of expanding employment in rural areas where unemployment is a big problem. Handloom workers are generally poor and this sector's vitality can lead to improvement in the earnings of workers on a large scale --who are at the fringes of social existence -- by alleviating their poverty. Rural women are hard pressed to find suitable and gainful employment. The expanding handloom sector can be a source of such employment for them.

The main problem of the handloom sector is one of credit. Institutional credits can hardly be accessed by most of them. Whatever credits currently trickle down to section of the handloom industry are considered to be not so useful for the weavers who are required to service their debts regularly with high interests rates under a monthly payment system. Clearly, the interest rate needs to be scaled down adequately and the mode of repayment should be also made flexible together with substantial increases in the total amount of credits to be disbursed among a much bigger number of borrowers to make a positive impact .The black marketing of imported fabrics of the RMG sector in the local market and the smuggling in of Indian handloom products also create undue competition for the local handloom sector. Polices and actions from the government are required to deal effectively with these problems.

Putin and Erdogan: Partnership of convenience?

Dimitar Bechev

Hard-nosed pragmatism continues to govern relations between Russia and Turkey. Judging by the scenes of protesting Crimean Tatars in Ankara and Istanbul, Russian President Vladimir Putin's visit did not elicit warm feelings among many Turks. Yet, he is always a welcome guest for the Turkish state.

A day after Pope Francis visited, the Kremlin's uncrowned emperor rolled into Turkey's capital with as many as 10 of his government ministers, to make two key announcements: First, that the South Stream pipeline, projected to carry natural gas to the EU under the Black Sea, has been abandoned; second, Turkey remains a partner of choice for Russia. The fate of the multibillion dollar project had been up in the air for a few months. Breaching EU competition rules, the pipeline project could have gone through if it had allowed access to suppliers other than Gazprom. The crisis in Ukraine and the mounting tensions gave EU policymakers an additional reason not to accommodate Russia's demands for special treatment.

As a result, Putin declared that resources will be directed towards upgrading gas pipeline infrastructure linking Russia to Turkey - or even building an altogether new pipeline, in an attempt to save face and offset the losses incurred over South Stream.

This decision underscores the pragmatism in the way Moscow and Ankara deal with each other. Meetings and official phone conversations between Putin and Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, more than 35 over the past few years, usually follow a very similar script. The two leaders agree to disagree on the ongoing human tragedy in Syria, where they sit on opposing sides, and proceed with bilateral business.

This time around, they made the usual pledge to triple the volume of trade between the two countries from the current figure of $33bn to $100bn by the end of this decade. That might be an ambitious target but one should not forget that Russia is already Turkey's second largest trading partner after Germany. It is, furthermore, the second biggest market for Russian gas exports outside the former Soviet Union, with Germany again the frontrunner.

Turkish construction firms have carved out a niche in the Russian market, benefiting handsomely from large public-funded project such as the Sochi Winter Olympics. This explains why Erdogan was deaf to calls for Turks of Circassian origin to boycott the games, which were set in the part of the Caucasus they were uprooted from back in the 1860s. But even in business things are not as smooth as they seem. Both Moscow and Ankara came to the table with their respective shopping lists to drive a hard bargain. What Turkey got out of the meeting was a six percent discount on gas traded between Gazprom and its gas oligopolist BOTAS as of January 1, 2015.

Currently, there is a problem with gas deliveries over the Trans-Balkan pipeline to western Turkey via Ukraine, Moldova, Romania and Bulgaria, because of disruptions due to the constant wrangling between Gazprom and Ukraine's Naftohaz. If the winter is harsh, heating in Istanbul and other large cities in the Marmara region will suffer. That is not a welcome prospect for the Turkish government, which is heading for general elections in the first half of 2015 and is therefore determined to avoid such unpleasant shocks and also keep gas prices low.

Asean could be the role model for Saarc

SYED MUNIR KHASRU

The 2014 Saarc Summit, which started with high expectations, ended low on delivery. The rivalry between India and Pakistan continues to frustrate efforts to integrate South Asia. Prime Minister Narendra Modi remarked in his opening speech that "Himalaya today is calling us to act. Let us work to change cynicism into optimism."

His Pakistan counterpart, Nawaz Sharif, stated: "We should build on convergences and minimise divergences." In reality, when even a gesture as small as Modi shaking hands with Sharif becomes news, it exposes the kind of congeniality prevailing in Saarc. The face-saving energy cooperation deal, so essential for the electricity-starved region, came about only after behind-the-scenes jockeying to get Pakistan on board as the summit ended with little tangible progress.

The unfortunate reality is that, with abundant natural resources and more than 1.5 billion people, Saarc has the potential to become the world's largest economy after the United States and China and is perceived as the next largest consumer market buoyed by steady economic growth and a booming middle class. For example, India's middle class is expected to reach 550 million by 2025-26, more than the combined forecasted population of Britain, Germany, France, Italy and Spain of 330 million. Yet, Saarc is failing to harvest the benefit with intra-Saarc trade of only 5%, compared to Asean's 32%, the EU's 50% and NAFTA's 65%.

While Saarc is high on rhetoric and low on performance, Asean has the momentum by becoming the centre of two emerging mega regional trade blocs - Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP), championed by China, and Trans Pacific Partnership (TPP), promoted by the US. The fact that India is the only Saarc country to be part of the RCEP and not the TPP, signifies how unimportant Saarc has become compared to Asean as far as global trade and investment are concerned.

Asean is a good example for Saarc, particularly for India and Pakistan, to realise the value of cooperation and benefits resulting from a larger common market despite diversity in politics and religion. In 1975, Asean nations signed the treaty of amity and cooperation, adopting the principles of renunciation of threat or use of force and settlement of disputes by peaceful means. The shared conviction of creating an economically win-win situation mobilised the nations in forming an interdependent regional economy.

The Asean Regional Forum was created in 1994 to foster dialogue, promote confidence-building, and adopt preventive diplomacy. A similar forum for Saarc will not only create room for deliberations but also bolster the fragile diplomatic relations.

To pave the way for Saarc's integration India-Pakistan rivalry has to stop and this calls for bold leadership. Given that India occupies 70% of the Saarc region, both geographically and economically, India has the onus to bring Saarc nations together, as stated by Modi: "I know India has to lead, and we will do our part." Whether he walks the talk remains to be seen.

For Saarc to progress, it must first capitalise on less contentious issues. Short-term success will create the momentum to work on long-term goals of regional connectivity, resource sharing, and investment. A good start can be adopting a 'South Asia First' policy, making Saarc countries import products first from within the region. For example, major garmentmanufacturing countries like Bangladesh and Sri Lanka import more than 80% of raw materials from outside Saarc, even though India and Pakistan are net exporters in this sector.

Leaders will need Himalayan heights of vision and courage to make Saarc a success. Whether Modi and his South Asian colleagues will rise to the occasion to unleash a new era of regional cooperation or Saarc will continue to languish in the abyss of historical mistrust and myopic economic vision is something the 1.5 billion people of South Asia will have to wait and see, even 30 years after Saarc's existence.

Imran Khan's Plan C

ASHRAF JEHANGIR QAZI

There were many questions asked before Imran Khan's Nov 30 dharna in Islamabad. How many would show up after 108 days with no apparent progress? Would there be violence? What new ideas would Imran have to offer? Was this his last throw of the dice? Or would he be able to inaugurate a new phase of the struggle to bring about a 'New Pakistan'?

A large number of workers, supporters and spectators did show up. There was no violence. The mood remained enthusiastic. As for new ideas Imran reiterated his wellknown demand for a judicial commission plus investigation team to assist it in an electoral audit of four specified constituencies. To this he added his decision to shut down three major cities for a day on Dec 4, 8, and 12 respectively, and shutting down the whole country for a day on Dec 16 unless the government accepted his demands.

Does this confirm a roll of the dice in Last Chance Saloon? Or is it a clever upping of the ante against a government that has resumed its smug complacency after its nerves were severely tested over several weeks of a double dharna in the capital? In the likely event of the government's refusal to entertain Imran's demands and its determination to thwart any attempt to close down major cities, will Imran be able to implement his Plan C? And, of course, what could he have in mind while threatening a Plan D?

Closing down Karachi - even for a day - would require an understanding with the MQM. Closing down Lahore and Faisalabad would be a direct challenge to the Sharif brothers. The whole country would be curtains for them. It would have to involve an understanding with GHQ as the prime minister constitutionally retains the option of calling out the army to break any strike that could negatively impact on national security and the economy. Significantly, the umpire's finger remained 'masterly inactive' during the first phase of the 'occupation' of Islamabad.

Accordingly, Plan C raises the question whether GHQ has changed its mind. The MQM may also not wish to risk its fragile understanding with the military by facilitating Imran in his more radical course of confrontation. Or has Imran decided to appeal directly to the urban masses over the heads of any and every centre of power? If so, he will be moving into virgin political territory.

There are many commentators and observers who incline to the view that a frustrated Imran has lost his marbles and is finally showing what an adolescent he really is. They will expect many of his more 'mature and seasoned' party colleagues to sooner or later review their decision to tie their political fortunes to such an unstable and populist demagogue. Some might recall Faiz Sahib's critical comments on Josh's poetic concept of the romantic hero who embodies a revolution in himself, in contrast to a genuine revolutionary who devotes his whole self to the service of the people as a purpose far greater than himself.

Stringent criticisms of Imran are commonly found among the safedposh ie the elites, apparatchiks and other social and political status quo stakeholders. They are also tellingly to be found among liberal and progressive civil society activists whom he needs to cultivate. But among the poorer youth, the unhappy, the weak, and other victims of the system there is such a profound and visceral aversion towards the 'rentier' and freeloading ruling classes that Imran, with all his shortcomings, can do no wrong in their eyes even when they know he is not always right. They see him as their last chance.

The comfortable classes may want an end to the 'tamasha' of dharnas, rallies, declamations, accusations, boorish language, jarring slogans, roadblocks, dislocations, loss of commerce and now, the threat of a series of large-scale city shutdowns that could shake their cosy and corrupt world. But there is also a rapidly growing underclass of people who are beginning to understand they do not have to remain losers for ever. Imran has made them aware of the prospect and promise of an order in which they can find inclusion and influence.

They see a stubborn and self-centred Imran as the only leader who has identified himself with their welfare and is unrelenting in his determination to make a real difference for the better in their lives. The risk that he may not live up to their expectations does not deter them. When Imran repeats 'ad nauseum' that the only asset of the people is their vote, their only enemies are corrupt leaders who destroy the value of their vote, and their only prospect is to sink in a swamp of corruption and cynicism unless they stand up for their rights, he strikes a chord with them that no other political leader comes close to doing.

So even when Imran appears quixotic, self-willed, irrational, and at times arrogant and uneducated, it is his disinterested commitment to the people combined with his renowned will to prevail over all odds that sustains them in the hopes they invest in him. One might argue these beautiful illusions will come crashing down upon his followers and, sooner or later, they will have to come to terms with the reality that he offers them nothing.

But the reality they confront is that the available alternatives to Imran civilian and military - have all been tested and found utterly wanting. Moreover, the current and former political leadership have made it clear they have absolutely no interest in doing anything for the people except to deceive in their name. The middle-class intelligentsia may mock Imran as dim, a dunderhead and given to diatribes, but for a developing majority who never enter the reckoning of chic political pundits, Imran is a knight in shining armour who is driven to fulfil their hopes. Plan C, for them, is a step in the right direction. Pakistan remains at a crossroads.

Treatment of AIDS will require targeting the regions and populations most affected

MICHAEL GERSON

My college roommate - the most immediately likable person I've ever met, a man who would now be such a present to the world - died of AIDS at the age of 30. Back then, people with the disease did not so much die as fade, becoming gaunt and ghostly images of themselves, as the virus gradually destroyed enough T-cells to cut their ties with the flesh. Metaphors don't really capture the horror. Declined? Withered? At any rate, he died.

That was 20 World AIDS Days ago, shortly before the arrival of miracle drugs that could have saved my friend's life. Several years later, when I was on the White House staff, the existence of those medicines created a moral predicament. While antiretroviral drugs were broadly available in the developed world, they were rarely distributed elsewhere. Of about 30 million people with HIV in sub-Saharan Africa, perhaps 50,000 were in treatment. The pandemic had already produced millions of orphans. Walking through South African shantytowns, I mainly met grandmothers and grandchildren. The intervening generation was nearly erased. In the affected countries, expectancy had fallen by 20 years.

President George W. Bush refused to live with this, urging the creation of the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, proposing a $15 billion emergency package of treatment, prevention and compassionate care (PEPFAR). A bipartisan congressional coalition supported this effort, which has been sustained across two administrations by the influence of tireless advocates inside and outside of government.

The global fight against AIDS was characterized, at first, mainly by breadth. After Bush's announcement of PEPFAR in the 2003 State of the Union address, hospital tents were erected in some places to get as many people on treatment as quickly as possible. Over time, PEPFAR and the Global Fund strengthened an infrastructure of laboratories, supply chains, human resources and infection control programs. Nearly 7 million people are now receiving AIDS drugs with the help of PEPFAR. Life expectancies in África have dramatically rebounded. Last year, for the first time, more people began AIDS treatment than were infected by the virus. A milestone. But the next stage of the AIDS response will tie ambition to precision. We are accustomed to the President George W. Bush refused to live with this, urging the creation of the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, proposing a $15 billion emergency package of treatment, prevention and data revolution as the cause of civil libertarian concern and the source of annoyingly targeted advertising. But epidemiologists are following improved data to the specific sites where disease is spread.

"Whether Ebola, HIV or malaria, infectious-disease epidemics are controlled by focusing where new infections are occurring," Mark Dybul, executive director of the Global Fund, told me. "For example, in Kenya, 53 percent of new adult and 73 percent of new child HIV infections are from five of 47 counties. Rates are highest among fisher folk, young women who trade sex with them and MSM [men who have sex with men]. If we focus on high-level endemic locations and populations, we can bend the curve rapidly and move to bring the HIV epidemic under control.'

Disease experts now have a set of proven HIV prevention methods: early treatment, male circumcision, condoms and the prevention of mother-to-child transmission. They have increasingly specific data on the geographic regions where infections are concentrated. They have a good idea of the highest-risk and hardest-to-reach groups: MSM, transgender people, people who inject drugs, children (who get treatment at lower rates) and young women. (Gender-based violence remains a major problem. In Swaziland, 43.5 percent of females 18 to 24 report having had unwilling first sexual intercourse before age 18.)

All of this data allow scientists essentially to shrink the epidemic map. We already knew that 30 countries have 89 percent of new HIV infections. Now we know that 22 percent of HIV testing and counseling centers in Tanzania report 88 percent of total positives. Resources can be employed where they will make the most difference. And these gains could be decisive when paired with an even partially effective vaccine (which is now a realistic prospect).

As usual, politics can get in the way. The kind of politics that wants to distribute resources equally by region to keep the locals happy. The kind of politics that targets groups for stigma and discrimination, particularly men who have sex with men and are too frightened to seek health services.

What is needed: compassion, increased resources and data that shape policy. And a memory of the lost - whose number still grows by nearly 30,000 each week.

EU implements Tk 40cr project to improve food security, nutrition

DHAKA: The European Union (EU) has implemented a 3.6 million euros (approx Tk 40 crore) project to contribute to one of the EU's key cooperation priorities in Bangladesh to improve food security and nutrition, reports UNB.

EU Ambassador Pierre Mayaudon on Tuesday addressed delegates at the closing workshop for the 'Agriculture and Nutrition Extension Project' (ANEP) at the city's Lakeshore Hotel.

"ANEP which is closing now is a success story. I could witness during a field visit to Barisal that the project has a direct impact on the betterment of the local communities. FM Zarif says Iran no longer facing 'drum of war'

TEHRAN: The world is no longer beating the "drum of war" against Iran, its foreign minister said on Tuesday, citing the direct benefit of the government's nuclear talks with the West, reports

Mohammad Javad Zarif said the decision to restart negotiations and seek a deal over the Islamic republic's disputed nuclear programme had reduced tension and would not be

But Zarif, who has led the Iranian side in talks with world powers that last month saw an interim agreement extended to June 30 next year, denied his team was bargaining "like carpet sellers" for a better deal. "Because of these negotiations the Islamic republic of Iran has become safer... and less vulnerable than before," he told students in Tehran in a speech carried live on state television. "No one can any longer beat the drum of war... the hostile atmosphere created against us has fallen through. The world has realised mutual understanding and common interests can lead to agreement."

Israel and the United States have said all options, including military measures, remain on the table should Iran not rein in its nuclear programme.

At the most recent negotiations, Iran and the P5+1 group (Britain, China, France, Russia and the United States plus Germany) missed a November 24 deadline for a comprehensive agreement. But they agreed to keep talking and set new deadlines of March 1 for a broad political framework and June 30 for the fine print of the final deal.

Key differences remain on when sanctions will be lifted on Iran and on what limits will be placed on its enrichment of uranium, a process used to produce energy but which can also lead to the fissile material needed for an atomic bomb. Iran denies seeking nuclear weapons.

Respect for Iran has increased since talks officially restarted in 2013, Zarif said, but the process has been hampered by "the Westerners having a wrong concept of how Iranian officials

'taarof', kill time, bargain like carpet sellers and give concessions at the last minute," he said.

"Taarof" refers to the Iranian art of politeness, an ancient custom of manners which in some environments is perceived as a potentially deceptive black art. "This wrong conception of our behaviour has caused us not to be able to reach our objectives in negotiations," he added, with more time needed for coming to terms on "details".

President Hassan Rouhani, meanwhile, echoed Zarif's comments on the nuclear talks and said the real challenge was to improve Iran's economy after years of sanctions. "The future path of the country is the path of development, progress and hope," he said in Gorgan, a northern city where Wednesday he will inaugurate a railway tie-up with Kazakhstan and Turkmenistan.

"The world has accepted it's high time to put an end to unjust sanctions. ic prosperity."

Bangla Academy Founded

Bangla Academy founded on 3 December 1955 at Burdwan House, Dhaka , was the outcome of the language movement of 1952, and, as such, a symbol of the movement and of Bengali nationalism. Since its inception, it has been playing a significant role in the development and modernisation of Bangla. The Bangla Academy came into being as a direct result of the Bengali Language movement of 1952, the movement that in more ways than one provided the motive power for Bangladesh's liberation struggle in 1971. Though 1952 is a milepost in the language movement, the struggle to give Bangla due recognition may be traced back to the second decade of the 20th century. At a meeting of the Vangiya Sahitya Parishad in 1925, chaired by Haraprasad Shastri, Dr Muhammad Shahidullah proposed the use of Bangla for academic and literary purposes. At the All-India Muslim Education Conference chaired by AK Fazlul Huq, he called upon the Government of Bengal to set up a translation department. On 31 December 1948 , in his presidential address at the East Pakistan Literary Conference held in Dhaka, he proposed the establishment of a language academy. After the events of 21 February 1952 the demand for establishing a centre like Bangla Academy became stronger. On 29 April 1952 the Azad, a leading Bangla newspaper, in its editorial stressed the importance of setting up an academy for Bangla. The University of Dhaka took some initiatives to set up an academy, but

Pakistani jets, ground forces kill 24 militants

ISLAMABAD: Pakistan army's jets and ground forces killed 24 militants as part of ongoing operations in the country's troubled tribal regions bordering Afghanistan, the military and a government official said Tuesday, reports AP. At least 30 suspected militants were killed on Tuesday during airstrikes conducted by military fighter jets in the Dattakhel area of North Waziristan tribal Security sources said that 30 militants, including two key commanders and several foreign fighters, were killed in the blitz which was carried out in a jungle situated in Dattakhel. At least twelve militants were killed as security forces repulsed an attack on a checkpost situated on the border with Tirah Valley in Orakzai Agency's Shirin Dara area.

Security sources said that scores of militants attacked a security checkpost in Shirin Dara with heavy weapons but forces repulsed the offensive. Sources added that at least 12 militants were killed in the retaliatory action by security forces and many others injured. The death toll is likely to rise. The militants fled from the area leaving behind the bodies of their comrades. The details could not be independently verified as access of mediapersons is restricted in the region.

Khyber and North Waziristan are included in Pakistan's seven semi-autonomous regions governed by tribal laws and lies near the Afghan border. The Taliban and other Al Qaeda-linked groups who stage attacks in both Pakistan and Afghanistan are also known to have strongholds in the zone.

Seventeen local and foreign "terrorists" were killed in airstrikes on Tuesday in the North Waziristan tribal region, where the military has been carrying out a major operation since June, a military statement said.

It provided no details and the identity of the slain militants was not known. The airstrikes were launched hours after more than 50 militants attacked a military checkpoint in the Khyber tribal region, triggering a shootout late Monday in which seven militants were killed, said Iqbal Khan, a government official. The assailants fled when the troops returned fire, he said, adding that security forces were searching the area to trace and arrest the attackers.

North Waziristan and Khyber tribal regions are closed to journalists and there is no way to independently confirm the information. The Pakistani army says it has killed about 1,200 militants since launching the operation in North Waziristan in mid-June. The push is aimed at eliminating those Pakistani and foreign militants accused of launching attacks in Pakistan and neighboring Afghanistan. The army says security forces are also carrying out an operation in Khyber to eliminate those who fled from the North Waziristan region.

3 Hong Kong protest leaders to surrender to police founders of Hong Kong's protest movement called Tuesday for an end to street demonstrations to prevent further violence and to take the campaign for democratic reforms to a new stage, reports AP.

It wasn't clear whether student protesters, who make up the bulk of the activists, would heed the call. Professors Benny Tai Yiu-ting and Chan Kin-man and Pastor Chu Yiu-ming said they plan to surrender to police on Wednesday to take responsibility for protests that have shut down parts of the Asian financial center for more than two months. Instead of street protests, the three hope to continue the campaign through networking among civic groups, community organizing and education in democracy and human rights. The three are founders of the Occupy Central movement to force China's central government to scrap its requirement that candidates for the semiautonomous region's chief executive be approved by a panel chosen by Beijing.

The Australian government has said it would hold a referendum but has not set a date. Mr Baird said it would take some time "before we convince the entire country" to vote for the change. Prime Minister Tony Abbott, a long-term supporter of constitutional recognition of indigenous Australians, has been speaking to conservative groups who do not want the constitution changed.

Indigenous Australians are not mentioned in the constitution. In the past few years, there have been discussions about recognising the constitution to include a section that outlaws racial discrimination.

Aboriginal Australians represent about 2.5% of Australia's 24 million people. Generations of discrimination and disadvantage have left them with poor health and low levels of education and employment. Changing the constitution would require a majority of overall votes and a majority of votes in a majority of Australia's six states. In 2010, the government formed an expert panel to examine constitutional recognition of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

TANG COUNTY: The black slabs of coal came in by the truckload through this dusty valley in northern China, slated to power cement and steel plants, heat the houses of poor farmers and even grill skewers of lamb and beef, reports UNB. Just a few dozen miles from the capital of Beijing, in Hebei province, coal use has long been a way of life here, with countless house-sized mounds of it dotting the forest floor. Yet the soot-covered residents of Tang County said they see change coming as Chinese leaders pledge to cut back on the kind of rampant coal use that has made this country the world's biggest emitter of greenhouse gases. Already, Beijing and other Chinese cities have been phasing out coal burning in an attempt to rein in clouds of toxic smog.

SEOUL: South Korean officials expressed fear Tuesday of a huge death toll after rescuers failed to find any of the more than 50 fishermen missing after their ship sank amid high waves in the freezing waters of the western Bering Sea on Monday, reports AP.

Authorities rescued seven crew members and recovered one body, but weather and water conditions complicated the search for the others, an official from the South Korean fisheries and oceans ministry said on condition of anonymity because of office rules.

The crew included 35 Indonesians, 13 Filipinos, 11 South Koreans and one Russian inspector, the official said. Russian authorities said there were 62 people aboard the ship, which sank in the western part of the Bering Sea, near Russia.

The South Korean ministry official said it's believed that the ship, which was catching pollock, began to list after stormy weather caused seawater to flood its storage areas. Kim Kang-ho from Sajo Industries, the canned tuna company that owns the ship, said the 2,000-ton vessel was 36 years old. An official from South Korea's foreign ministry, who refused to be named citing office rules, said Tuesday morning that the death toll was expected to rise because rescuers failed to find any of the missing passengers. Four fishing ships that were operating nearby continue to search for survivors, but harsh weather conditions have limited their mobility, the official said. South Korean Prime Minister Chung Hong-won vowed told a Cabinet meeting that the government will work with Russia to speed up the rescue efforts.

Mark Boucher's Birthday

South Africa best wicketkeeper, Mark Verdon Boucher was born on this day in 1976 at East London, Cape Province in South Africa. A man to go to war with, but never against, Mark Boucher packed all the archetypical attributes of the South African cricketer into his short, stocky frame.

He was relentlessly competitive, invariably aggressive, and as hard and uncompromising as the new ball.

After an international career that lasted almost 15 years, the end was desperately unfortunate, as Boucher was forced to announce his retirement after being hit in the eye by a bail in a warm-up game on the tour to England in 2012, which would have been his last series anyway.

Boucher finished with 998 international dismissals as a wicketkeeper, including 555 in 147 Tests.

In fight against IS, Iraqi PM sacks 24 officials

BAGHDAD : Iraq's prime minister said Monday he retired 24 officials from the Interior Ministry as part of efforts to restructure the country's security apparatus and remove those who failed to confront the crisis caused by the Islamic State group's onslaught, reports UNB.

Haider al-Abadi's announcement came as the Sunni extremist group attacked a police checkpoint near Iraq's border with Syria, killing at least 15 Iraqi policemen in an assault that underscored the depth of the country's turmoil.

In Syria, the U.S. Central Command said a U.S. airstrike struck a target associated with the so-called Khorasan group, which Washington says is a special cell within the al-Qaidalinked Nusra Front that is plotting attacks against Western interests.

$130M to revamp NYC jails for mentally ill

NEW YORK : New York City's mayor wants to spend $130 million over four years to overhaul how the most populous U.S. city deals with mentally ill and drug-addicted suspects, diverting many to treatment instead of the city's troubled Rikers Island jail complex, reports UNB. Mayor Bill de Blasio's plans, to be announced Tuesday, are based on the recommendations of a task force he appointed following a series of reports by The Associated Press detailing problems at Rikers, including the deaths of two inmates suffering from serious mental illness.

The reforms are aimed largely at inmates with mental-health or substance-abuse problems who repeatedly end up in jail on minor offenses because there is nowhere else for them to go.

Lebanon detains Islamic State leader Baghdadi's wife

LEBANON: Lebanese security forces have detained a wife and son of Islamic State (IS) leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi near the border with Syria, the army says, reports BBC.

The pair, whose names were not given, were picked up by military intelligence after entering Lebanon 10 days ago. The al-Safir newspaper reported that Baghdadi's wife was being questioned at the Lebanese defence ministry. In June, Baghdadi was named the leader of the "caliphate" created by IS in the parts of Syria and Iraq it controls.

Last month, the group denied reports that he had been killed or injured in an air strike by US-led forces near the northern Iraqi city of Mosul. It released an audio recording purportedly of Baghdadi in which he said the caliphate was expanding and called for "volcanoes of Describing them as "a valuable catch", al-Safir said that, in co-ordination with foreign intelligence services, the IS leader's wife and son were detained at a border crossing near the town of Arsal while trying to enter Lebanon from Syria with forged papers. They were currently being held for interrogation at the defence ministry's headquarters in al-Yarza, in the hills overlooking Beirut, it added.

A security source told the AFP news agency that the woman was a Syrian citizen and that her son was eight or nine years old.

Assuming the reports are true - and there is little reason to doubt them - the Lebanese authorities now face the delicate question of what to do with Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi's wife and offspring.

In theory, they could prove a useful bargaining chip in the highly-charged imbroglio surrounding the fate of more than 20 Lebanese Army soldiers held hostage since August by IS and the rival al-Qaeda-linked militant group, al-Nusra Front.

Ukraine government, rebels agree on new cease-fire

NATO foreign ministers meet in Brussels on Tuesday to chart a course forward after a "year of aggression" from Ukraine to the Middle East and the end of the alliance's combat mission in Afghanistan, reports AFP/BSS.

New chief Jens Stoltenberg said on the eve of the meeting that it was a decisive time marked by Russia's intervention in Ukraine and the group in Iraq and Syria.

"2014 has been a year of aggression, crisis and conflict," said Norway's Stoltenberg, who took over from Denmark's Anders Fogh Rasmussen on October 1, adding that "Russia's actions have undermined Euro-Atlantic security.

US Secretary of State John Kerry and other ministers will tackle an agenda topped by an interim rapid-reaction force capable of meeting the new and more unpredictable threats that the transatlantic alliance faces. The Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe said that under the agreement, hostilities are to cease Friday along the line of contact between the warring sides.

It was agreed at negotiations that took place Saturday that heavy weapons will start being withdrawn from the front at the weekend, the OSCE said in its daily update report Monday evening. Igor Plotnitsky, the head of the rebel movement in Luhansk, confirmed the ceaseagency, but said no definitive agreement had been reached on the breadth of the demilitarized zone. He told Interfax the distance could range between 15 and 20 kilometers.

Obama said he was upset to hear the young people in the meeting describe their experiences with police. "It violates my belief in what America can be to hear young people feeling marginalized and distrustful even after they've done everything right." At least for now, Obama is staying away from Ferguson in the wake of

Martin Luther King Jr. preached - Holder said that he will soon unveil long-planned Justice Department guidance aimed at ending racial profiling by federal law enforcement.

"This will institute rigorous new standards and robust safeguards - to help end racial profiling, once and for all," Holder said.

While SRK and Ash have been confirmed, there is no news of the other two male members pf the cast. Chalti Ka Naam Gaadi starred Ashok Kumar, Kishore Kumar and Anup Kumar in the lead roles while Madhubala played Kishore da's love interest. The grapevine suggests that Rohit Shetty was planning to rope in actors Arjun Kapoor and Varun Dhawan for the project but the director has denied this. Aishwarya Rai Bachchan's comeback film has been the subject of endless speculation for a long time now. And while Sanjay Gupta's Jazbaa could claim to be that film, it is this film with SRK that could put her squarely back on the Bollywood map yet again.

Ronaldo, Messi, Neuer up for Ballon d'Or

The goalkeeper who won the World Cup will be Cristiano challenging Ronaldo and Lionel Messi for the Ballon d'Or, reports

While the footballer of the year prize has switched between the world's top scorers since 2008, Manuel Neuer of Germany is the first goalkeeper to make the Ballon d'Or top three since 2006.

Ronaldo won the 2013 honor, ending Argentina forward Messi's three-year run as the world's best player since FIFA and France Football magazine merged their awards.

In the women's category, five-time winner Marta of Brazil was nominated on Monday alongside 2012 winner Abby Wambach and Germany midfielder Nadine Kessler, who is seeking the honor for the first time.

The winners, chosen by national team captains and coaches, plus selected journalists, will be journalists, announced in Zurich on Jan. 12.

Messi has broken the Champions League and Spanish league scoring records this month after winning the Golden Ball at the World Cup, but he will end 2014 without a team honor. Argentina lost to Germany in the World Cup final, Bayern Munich goalkeeper Neuer keeping a clean sheet as he followed winning the German league wearing and cup by lifting football's biggest prize. The last goalkeeper to make the Ballon D'Or top three was Gianluigi Buffon after Italy won the World Cup final in a shootout against France.

Neuer earlier this month played down his chances of winning the top individual award in football by citing his lower profile away from the pitch, particularly his lack of photo shoots wearing underwear.

I'm going to have to work it out when we get to Adelaide and see how I feel' - Ryan Harris.

'It's going to be pretty bloody hard' - Harris

Sports Desk

Ryan Harris bowled sixty balls at Queensland training on Tuesday. Not a single one was a bouncer, reports Cricinfo.

While this was primarily so he could hone issues of rhythm and technique, Harris' reluctance to send down a short ball spoke much for the changes wrought to cricket by the death of Phillip Hughes. So did the fact that two days out from hat would have been day one of the Gabba Test, Harris was at Allan Border Field in his state colours.

Harris, Mitchell Johnson, Peter Siddle and company must wrestle with one of the many awfully mixed emotions arising from Hughes' death. They have been reminded of the destructive power of the bouncer, reeled at this fact, and yet must eventually find a way to harness it again. It will take time.

"It's inevitable it's going to happen - I've been bowling bouncers for a long time and I've hit guys before," Harris said in Brisbane. "It's part of the game but it just gives you that extra bit of doubt now about a very small percentage of what happened. I'm sure we'll get back eventually to the way we were playing last summer, but it's going to be tough because we base our game on aggression."

That question will take longer to answer than a more immediate one, around who will consider themselves fit will be on their captain Michael Clarke, to play in the first Test in Adelaide from December 9. Harris has experienced this dilemma before, when his mother Gai died of lung cancer in 2006. Even so, he remains unsure of when he will be ready.

"I'm still thinking about it, I'll see how I go tomorrow," Harris said of Hughes' funeral in Macksville. "Every individual is different. Personally I've lost my mother before and the best thing for me was I was probably pushed to play for my father and my brother and it probably helped. But even still, it's going to be tough for some boys. It's going to be tough for me.

"I'm going to have to work it out when we get to Adelaide and see how I feel. I feel good having been out today, which was good. Keeping busy this morning has allowed me not to sit around and think about tomorrow, to be honest. Each individual is different. The boys who were there and witnessed what happened ... I can't speak for them because I couldn't imagine what they're going

There will be a lot of love, a lot of pain and a lot of shared memory of Hughes at his funeral in on Wednesday. Harris and his Australian team-mates are all making the trip, mainly via an overnight stay in Sydney on Tuesday. Many of their eyes who will continue to carry a significant burden of friendship and leadership by speaking during the service.

"We want him playing. He's our captain and our leader and through this whole thing he's shown why he is," Harris said. "He's hurting and he's had a lot to deal with, he's been just unbelievable. We've had some good chats as a group the last few days and he's just been fantastic. So we

"We'd have liked a bit longer but that's just reality. There's a Test series on and there's games to be played. That's what we have to do. Those who can prepare will and those who can't will need more time. It's a 50/50 but the bottom line is we've got a date to work to now. The idea was we had a chat yesterday and we just wanted a date to work towards. Some guys can and some guys may not be able

"Let's just get past tomorrow first. It's going to be pretty bloody hard. The thing about this is that no-one knows. No-one's been in the situation of losing a teammate and a very good mate and trying to play a cricket game less than a week later. No-one's been in that situation. We'll get through tomorrow, see how we all feel and get to Adelaide and regroup."

Hughes family wants big crowd at funeral

Sports Desk

Phillip Hughes' family hopes as many people as possible will attend his funeral in Macksville on Wednesday. Approximately 5000 mourners are expected to attend the funeral service, which will take place at 2pm in the sports hall at Macksville High School, with overflow areas on the school's two sports ovals. Cricket Australia also expect 300 to 400 dignitaries and past and present players to attend the service, including the entire New South Wales and Australia Test squads. James Henderson, Hughes' manager, told reporters in Macksville on Tuesday that despite the limited capacity of the school hall, the family hoped anyone who wanted to attend would do so.

Dollar holds up, ruble rebounds

TOKYO: The dollar held steady in Asia Today after sliding on a rebound in oil prices, while the Russian ruble bounced back after its biggest one-day fall in 16 years, reports AFP/BSS.

In Tokyo, the greenback fetched 118.44 yen, against 118.40 yen in New York. The euro eased to $1.2464 from $1.2469, while it was flat at 147.64 yen.

The dollar has climbed since Thursday, when the OPEC oil cartel ignored calls to cut production in the face of a supply glut sending crude prices plunging to five-year lows. The greenback benefits from lower prices as they are considered a plus for the US

However, analysts expect the dollar to resume its uptrend, saying the lift in oil prices may just be a technical correction.

The ruble rose after sinking almost nine percent to 53.9 against the greenback Monday, its worst one-day drop since Russia's debt meltdown in dollar.

The Russian unit has lost 60 percent of its value against the dollar since the start of the year, pummelled by tumbling oil prices and Western sanctions over Moscow's support for Ukrainian separatists.

On Monday, the dollar briefly soared to a fresh seven-year high of 119.15 yen after Moody's cut its credit rating for Japan, putting it below China and South Korea and on par with Israel and the Czech Republic.

Moody's cited "rising uncertainty" over the country's debt situation after Prime Minister Shinzo Abe put off a planned sales tax hike that was aimed at curbing the country's massive public debt. "It seems Moody's impact (on the currency market) was only limited," Shusuke Yamada, chief FX strategist at Merrill Lynch Japan Securities, told Dow Jones Newswires.

"The underlying trend of the yen's

1998. On Tuesday, it was at 51.2 to the weakness (against the dollar) remains strong over the mid-term.'

Investors are keeping tabs on a European Central Bank policy meeting later in the week to see if it unveils any fresh easing measures to fight off deflation, while a closely watched US jobs report will come out on Friday.

The dollar weakened against other Asia-Pacific currencies.

The Australian dollar rose to 85.04 US cents from 84.45 cents the previous day after the country's central bank held interest rates at a record low of 2.5

The dollar also fell to 32.80 Thai baht from 32.89 baht, to Sg$1.3051 from Sg$1.3083 and to 44.75 Philippine pesos from 44.95 pesos.

The greenback slipped to Tw$31.03 from Tw$31.05, to 1,105.30 South Korean won from 1,114.13 won, and to 61.97 Indian rupees from 62.14 rupees, while it was unchanged at 12,273.80 Indonesian rupiah.

Royal Mail's Ofcom review sparks share price fall

UK: Shares in the Royal Mail are down 2.5% after Ofcom ruled the universal postal service, which obliges the Royal Mail to deliver across the UK for one price, is not under threat, reports Reuters.

The regulator Ofcom said it saw no reason to change rules to force rivals to take on part of that obligation.

However, Ofcom said it would review the factors affecting Royal Mail's ability to deliver the universal service.

Royal Mail had complained competitors were cherry picking profitable areas.

Under postal market reforms, rivals can apply for a licence to collect, sort and deliver bulk mail. Other competitors, including Whistl, pay Royal Mail an access fee for it to deliver to customers. The government has guaranteed that the universal service will continue at least until 2021. Last week, Moya

Greene, the Royal Mail's chief executive, told a committee of MPs that the universal service cost £7.2bn a year to finance, so needed cross-subsidy from profitable urban deliveries.

She said Royal Mail had already seen a "structural" decline of between 4% and 6% in the volume of letters it handles every year. Roval Mail said it would comment on Ofcom's announcement later on Tuesday.

Ed Richards, chief executive of Ofcom, said: "Ofcom's board has considered all the evidence in the postal market carefully over the past few months.

'We have concluded that there is no present risk to the financial sustainability of the universal service. This conclusion is based on the Royal Mail's own business plan and evidence as well as a range of other

Islami Bank opens 291st branch at Mirzanur India govt rejects tycoon Mallya as Kingfisher Airlines chief MUMBAI: The Indian government has rejected the reappointment of liquor baron Vijay Mallya as head of his grounded and debt-laden Kingfisher Airlines, in yet another blow to the self-crowned "king of good times".

Kingfisher, once India's second-largest airline by passenger share, is under growing pressure to repay debts of nearly $1.5 billion owed to a consortium of largely state-run banks. The airline has not made a profit since Mallya founded it in 2005. Its fleet was grounded in 2012. The company said the ministry of corporate affairs had rejected Mallya's application for reappointment, a move required under government regulations, without detailing why.

The ministry rejected the application "for reappointment of Vijay Mallya as managing director of the Company for a period of 5 years from October 16, 2013 without remuneration", the airline said in a statement to the Bombay Stock Exchange (BSE) on Monday night.

The move was widely expected after Mallya was declared a "wilful defaulter" by one of his bankers in September, a term that makes it difficult for him to find new lenders.

Earlier Monday another firm, Mangalore Chemicals & Fertilisers, told the BSE that Mallya had resigned from its board. It gave no reasons. The news lifted MCF shares sharply on the day. Kingfisher Airlines shares were suspended in November after stock exchange authorities demanded the carrier declare long-awaited financial results. Mallya made his fortune through an inherited liquor business and branched out with Kingfisher Airlines, named after his top-selling beer which is an Indian household name. But Mallya is struggling to retain control of his empire. Analysts says Kingfisher Airlines was a casualty of India's cut-throat fare wars in the congested sector.

The full-service Kingfisher, which boasted it treated flyers as "guests", never returned to the skies after pilots went on strike in 2012 over unpaid wages.

Australia's central bank holds interest rates at 2.5%

SYDNEY: Australia's central bank Today held interest rates at a record low 2.5 percent, signalling its intention to keep an accommodative monetary policy while saying a weaker exchange rate was needed to support growth, reports AFP/BSS.

It was the 15th consecutive meeting in which the Reserve Bank of Australia has left the cash rate unchanged, and reflected opposing pressures on the economy with a booming housing market and slumping commodity prices. In an unchanged commentary of the decision, bank governor Glenn Stevens said "monetary policy is appropriately configured to foster sustainable growth in demand and inflation outcomes consistent with the target". "On present indications, the most prudent course is likely to be a period of stability in interest rates." The bank reinforced its call for a weaker Australian dollar, which it believes is slowing a rebalancing of the economy away from mining-led growth as resources investment is expected to sharply fall off after an unprecedented boom. "A lower exchange rate is likely to be needed to achieve balanced growth in the economy," Stevens said in comments that added to previous remarks that said the currency "remains above most estimates of its fundamental value". The Australian dollar, which was trading at about 84.80 US cents ahead of the statement, pushed higher to 85.12 cents in the afternoon. The RBA also noted the significant decline in commodity price falls in recent months on the back of softer demand and a supply glut, which has hit Australian mining firms and government coffers. "For me the reference to commodity price falls having been significant was important," Westpac chief currency strategist Robert Rennie told AFP.

"That would suggest that the RBA would like to see further weakness in the Australian dollar well below the 85 US cents mark," he said. "Obviously the reference to the fact that a lower exchange rate is likely to be needed to achieve balanced growth in the economy I think is an important warning as well."

Markets have increased expectations that the central bank will cut rates in the next year as commodity prices slump, and with an unemployment rate that has edged up to a decade-high above 6.0 percent over the past few

Japan's Nikkei hits fresh seven-year high

JAPAN: Japan's Nikkei closed at a fresh seven-year high on Tuesday as investor sentiment was buoyed by talk of the Bank of Japan (BoJ) buying stocks, reports AP. The benchmark Nikkei 225 closed up 0.4% at 17,663.22 points.

Earlier, the index had fallen after Moody's Investment Service cut Japan's credit rating by one notch to A1 from Aa3. Moody's move underlined concerns over Japan's economy after an increase in the national sales tax was delayed. But analysts said the weaker yen, together with the possible move by the BoJ, was continuing to support investor sentiment. China shares rallied on speculation that the country's central bank was preparing to reduce bank

In Hong Kong, the Hang Seng index closed up 1.2% at 23,654.30, while the Shanghai Composite rose 3.1%, to 2,763.54 - its best daily rise since September 2013. The first ever world report on disability, conducted by WHO and the World Bank, suggests that more than a billion people in the world today experience disability. In Bangladesh, the crude disability rate per thousand populations, according to the SVRS 2011, is 9.93 with 11.10 for male and 8.77 for female (BBS 2013). The rate was 9.36, 9.11, 9.99, and 8.96 for both male and female in 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009 respectively; and it denotes the upward trend of increasing the number of disabled people in Bangladesh. This report reveals that disability rate for male is more than that of female by 26.57% as well as this rate in rural area is more than that of urban area for both male and female. The people with disabilities are higher with the higher age and the highest rate of disabilities is 13.91-19.37% in Rangpur division, Bangladesh. The major types disabilities prevalent in Bangladesh are blind, night blind, deaf, mentally retarded (Cerebral palsy), Kustha, lame (Achondroplasia), Dhabal, Goitre and short in memory while deaf, cerebralpalsia and lame are highest proportion of disability categories. These large numbers of disabled people are excluded from the mainstream society even economic sphere. We have to include them into the conventional social structure rather than making them dependent on the state supports or welfare benefits. The interaction of health conditions, personal factors, and environmental factors differs significantly in the life of people who experienced different types of disabilities. The mentioned types of disabilities, prevalent Bangladesh, result from accident, illness, aging, by born or hereditary and many other reasons. People are impossible. Development and disabilities are interdependent phenomenon: disability may increase the poverty situation, and the poverty may increase the risk of disability. On the other hand, it is not only the personal problem but also the social problem as well as collective identity. The disability may worsen the social, economic well-being and poverty through different channels including the adverse impact on education, employment, earnings and expenses related to disability. Disable children can't attend even adult lose their productivity as well as employment opportunities. People with disabilities are not able to get benefit from development and get rid from poverty situation due to discrimination in employment, limited access to transport, and lack of access to resources to promote self-employment and mostly suffering from different kinds of disabilities by born which could not be prevented but the reduction of sufferings is not quite livelihood activities. Families with disabled people have to bear extra costs associated with medication, care, special food and nutrition even they face hardship to manage sufficient food, housing, clean

All people with disabilities are not equally excluded from mainstream that result from several personal factors with differences in gender, age, socioeconomic status, sexuality, ethnicity, or cultural heritage. For example, a boy, same to my age at my village, is disable whose parents' economic condition was not good enough as my family. Though I don't have strong economic background like him but I am post-graduate managing my own educational expenditures due to my physical capability. He may also be like me but he was not able only for his physical inability. On the other hand, Professor Stephen W. Hawking is still alive and continuing his scientific research successfully though he is suffering from motor neurone disease since his early childhood. Women with disabilities experience the combined disadvantages associated with gender as well as disability, and people who experience mental health conditions or intellectual impairments appear to be more disadvantaged in many settings than those who experience physical or sensory impairments.

The pioneer sociologists who provide sociological interpretation of disabilities, Colin Barnes, Mike Oliver, Len Barton and others, said about social model of disability: disability as collective/ social issue. Oliver (1996) said disabled people were excluded from the labor market while individual or biomedical model: bodily abnormality is the cause of individual sufferings. The analysis of social reaction toward disadvantaged disabled people such as people with impairments was central for sociologists working within the traditions of symbolic interactionism during the 1960s emphasising upon meaning, identity and the process of labelling explored the relationships between disablement and socially proscribed behaviour. According to this perspective, persons with disabilities are labelled by 'altering psychic structure' through the mechanisms of deviance creation and the labelling process. In our society, we usually stigmatize or label disabled people as dwarf, blind, Othorbo and in many other ways that has been theorized by Goffman (1963) as social exclusion with stigmatization of individual: ation of stigma is an issue of exploitation and oppression rather than avoidance. Women are sometimes scolded by the family of father- in-law for giving birth of disabled child and also seen as curse by Allah due to her sin in South Asian countries. The exclusion of disabled persons seen as cultural phenomena emphasising

on the disability-engendering role played by cultural ideas, always negative, about people with impairment. Foucauldian notions of the self-disciplining of the body in the shadow of powerful medical and welfarist discourses on impairment are seen to offer ways of understanding the subordination experienced by disabled people (Price and Shildrick 1998).

The process of marginalisation, oppression, discrimination, exclusion, or in other words disablement, which affects people with impairments. We can socially include persons with disabilities in mainstream workforce advancing employment policies in favor of disable people. The United Nation has initiated Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities to preserve rights for disabled people viewing persons with disabilities as 'subjects' with claiming rights and making decision as well as providing consent as an active member of civil society as well as including disabled people in MDG agenda. Sustainable economic development in Bangladesh is impossible excluding these large number of people with disabilities that emphasizes the social inclusion of those disabled people in our mainstream society through different types of effective measures like participation of civil society.

In Bangladesh, persons with disabilities are getting some benefits such as quota in educational institutions, job sectors etc. which measures were taken by different governments in different periods though these are not sufficient for their true inclusion in policy level. The present Awami League government has also taken some initiatives for persons with disabilities specially establishing cochlear implementation centre for autistic child in BSMMU. The rapid development of information and communication technology creates new forms of employment, organizations, medication, health care system etc. that could help us a lot to include persons with disabilities in employment policies even they can be able with the blessings of medicines, treatment facilities such as cosmetic surgery, genetic screening, limb lengthening, cochlear implants, conductive education and so forth. So, each government including Bangladesh should take some effective policies ensuring the participation of civil society members to ensure sustainable economic development. It could only be possible undertaking initiatives associated to latest information and communication tech nology initiating sign language teaching in schools, barrier removal, awareness raising on social, cultural and religious prejudices; and legislation for equal opportunities though some NGOs are working for persons with disabilities over the world which are not significant.

Etihad codeshares on maiden Abu Dhabi-Stuttgart direct flights

DHAKA: Etihad Airways and partner airberlin celebrated the launch of the German carrier's new service from Stuttgart to Abu Dhabi on Monday night, with the inaugural flight receiving a traditional water canon salute on arrival at Abu Dhabi International Airport, reports UNB.

The daily service is airberlin's first long-haul route from Stuttgart, capital of Germany's Baden-Württemberg state, and also serves as the first direct connection between the thriving economic city and Abu Dhabi, capital of the United Arab Emirates, said a press release. It is operated using a two-class Airbus A320 aircraft, offering a total of 12 Business Class seats and 132 Economy Class seats.

Etihad Airways has placed its 'EY' code on the flights as part of a codeshare agreement with airberlin, and connects the service with a range of business and leisure destinations across its network in the GCC region, Indian Subcontinent, South East Asia and Australia.

Biman introduces SMS for passengers

DHAKA Bangladesh Airlines Ltd on Tuesday launched a short message service (SMS) for its passengers, reports UNB.

From now on, passengers of the national flag carrier will be informed about all related information, including a possible change in flight schedule, through SMS to their mobile phones, said a Biman press release.

The introduction of the new service will help reduce harassment of passengers as it will enable them to arrive at airport on time. Biman Bangladesh Airlines and mobile operator Banglalink has earlier signed an agreement in this regard.

Shakib Al Hasan

Shakib has played two Big Bash matches for Adelaide Strikers in the 2013-14 season.

On July 7, Shakib was told he wouldn't be granted an NOC to play in overseas competitions until the end of 2015.

He was punished for 'serious misbehaviour" Chandika Hathurusingha, the Bangladesh coach, and an altercation with a spectator during the first ODI against India in Mirpur.

On August 26, the BCB reduced his ban by three a half months, letting him play from September 15. Shakib was then made vice-captain for the ODI series against Zimbabwe. He was man of the series in the Tests against Zimbabwe and played a stellar role in Bangladesh's 5-0 ODI series win.
